1. Introduction

In our Democratic India with a Right to Elect our representative the Constitution guarantees Fundamental Right of right of equality and right against discrimination. Despite these rights if women are treated unequally then it is very sad state of affairs. In this modern era, we are giving our best to look after for our issues but on other side of India, there are happenings of child marriages. The marriage of child in their childhood make their future miserable. But having these different critical problems, our country is still struggling to be at par with the advanced societies of other abroad countries. A woman is consider weaker and is not treated with equality. They are not allowed to take sufficient education. Most of the girls in the rural India are not able to find opportunity to complete their primary education. In their childhood, they are given much household tasks to perform. These tasks are a great obstacle for their educational performances. It has been seen that the women with no education or less education cannot play a vital role in the family development and hence for national development.

In India the position of the women is not satisfactory in all aspects. She is, somehow, directly or indirectly dependent on the male. Since long women movements had been organized from time to time. But the struggle for their empowerment is still going on. Now a days, in every type of Government, there is need to coordinate with the people and among its various departments. By the passage of time and rapid industrialization, the woman have come out of their houses and became a part of progress by working in various sector jobs. For every nation there are two vital sector of job for which keen attention has to be paid. These are health sector and education sector. Both of these sector cover a large number of women workers. The research scholar will try to study about the term sexual harassment in relation to different variables in two important work areas of health and education. The result achieved of the research study will help the government to take necessary steps for the elimination of the working women sexual harassment in these sectors. The attitude of the working women and effects of age workplace distance, locality and knowledge about laws dealing with sexual harassment will be studied that will ultimately helps to give a clear picture of the sexual harassment of working women in health and education sector for the lessening of this curse. The research scholar have selected the health sector and education sector as area of research due to their more connectivity with the ordinary persons. More or less every person is to some how connected with these sectors.
