METHODOLOGY

1. DESCRIPTIVE QUALITATIVE RESEARCH

The study in its nature is qualitative and employs comparative textual-narrative analysis of all the novels of the author. As the collected data are descriptive and narrative, therefore, the qualitative tools like definition, explanation, interpretation and comparative analysis are employed to analyze the data and draw generalization and conclusion.

2. THE COMPARATIVE RESEARCH DESIGN

The researcher has employed comparative research design to compare and analyse the data collected from the selected novels for drawing conclusion. The undertaken study deals with both the questions of similar and different outcomes: how the novelist has presented queer theory subject in his novels. Hence, the researcher sought to both the questions of similar and different outcomes and after comparing and contrasting the data collected from the text of the undertaken novels drew conclusions, using Liberal Humanism as the frame of references for this study.

3. LIBERAL HUMANISM LITERARY DISCOURSE RESEARCH METHOD

Peter Barry in his Beginning Theory describes the term ‘liberal humanism’-“a way of referring to the kind of criticism which held sway before theory. The word ‘liberal’ in this formulation roughly means not politically radical and hence generally evasive and non-committal on political issues. ‘Humanism’ implies something similar; it suggests a range of negative attributes, such as ‘non-Marxist’ and ‘non-feminist’, and ‘non-theoretical’. There is also the implication that liberal humanists believe in ‘human nature’ as something fixed and constant which great literature expresses. Liberal humanists did not (and do not, as a rule) use this name of themselves but says an influential school of thought, if you practice literary criticism and do not call yourself a Marxist critic, or a structuralist, or a stylistician, or some such, then you are probably a liberal humanist, whether or not you admit or recognize this” (p. ). Hence the undertaken study focuses the presentation of the liberal humanism in his novels and the conclusions and generalization are made the light of the tents or postulates of the discourse.
