HYPOTHESIS

- The hypertensive subjects often possess significant imbalance in oxidative and antioxidative mechanism.

- These alternations may have some relation to the hypertensive of different blood groups and this may apply to a certain different level of oxidative stress and its deteriorative role in an individual blood group.

- The study taken up is a comprehensive work on the level of oxidative stress in hypertensive patients and its correlation with different blood groups (A, B, AB and O).