SCOPE & LIMITATIONS

The research deals with the study of existential perspectives in Arun Joshi, Anita Desai and Jhumpa Lahiri’s novels and through them throw light on the transitional phase of individual and self-development by self-realization. The research depends entirely on secondary sources of research, critical study of journals. The inferences and conclusions drawn from the study can be helpful to scholars to understand the existential problems in a better light however the ideas may not be completely innovative.

UTILITY

The research will enable the present generation to understand the concept of existentialism from a global context and also the advent of existentialism in the post colonial period. The novels of the three prominent existential writers convey to the readers, through the predicaments of their characters that, man himself is responsible for his actions. It will create awareness about responsible behavior.
